

Algorithm for Molecular Simulation and Analysis

Rachel Vincent–Finley, Southern University and A & M College

In this presentation we will discuss a technique which reduces the dimensionality of a molecular simulation. Principal component analysis of molecular dynamics trajectories are used to construct collective coordinates on which further simulations are based. We discuss details encountered in developing the current method and explore applications and limitations.