

Geometry of Random Stepped Surfaces

Richard Kenyon, Yale

A stepped surface is a surface composed of squares from the cubic lattice, and which projects monotonically in the $(1,1,1)$ direction. We study random stepped surfaces (with fixed boundary) and their limits when the lattice spacing tends to zero. Despite quite complicated formulas for the limit shapes (involving dilogarithms), there is a clean geometric formulation.