

Challenges for numerical relativity and gravitational-wave source modeling

Emanuele Berti, Johns Hopkins University

The prospect of LISA observations and the ever improving sensitivity of Earth-based gravitational-wave detectors pose new challenges for numerical relativity and gravitational-wave source modeling. I will discuss some of these challenges, as well as the potential rewards in terms of parameter estimation and tests of strong-field gravity.