

A simple spectral algorithm for a general clustering problem

Van Vu, Yale University

We discuss a simple spectral algorithm which gives a quick solution to a very general clustering problem. The main tools include a useful concentration inequality for random projection (discussed in details in Ke Wang's talk), and facts about random matrices. If time allows, we will discuss some special subproblem, such as hidden clique and stochastic block models.