Computability and computational complexity in dynamical systems.
Cristóbal Rojas, Universidad Andrés Bello (Santiago)

We will review some recent results on the computability and computational complexity, in the sense of theoretical computer science, of invariant sets and invariant measures of dynamical systems in different classes. In particular, we will overview a general strategy allowing to prove the computability of such objects, together with a few applications.