Some hybrid symbolic-numeric methods in algebraic geometry
Jonathan Hauenstein, University of Notre Dame

On the theoretical side, algebraic geometry combines aspects of algebra and geometry to provide many tools to prove new results. On the computational side, symbolic computations typically based on algebra and numerical computations typically based on geometry can be combined to provide many new computational tools to study a variety of problems in algebraic geometry. This talk will explore some hybrid symbolic-numeric methods and applications in computational algebraic geometry.