

Computational problems in tensors

Shmuel Friedland, University of Illinois at Chicago

Nowadays data are given as d -tensors, (d -multi-arrays), where usually $d > 2$. The problems in tensors pose many computational and numerical challenges, since most of the problems are NP-hard. In this talk we will discuss a number of problems that the speaker worked on: low rank approximation of tensors, completion of missing entries and compressive sensing of sparse tensors.