

Reliable numerical evaluation of special functions: algorithms and experiments.

Bruno Salvy, INRIA

A large number of special functions can be defined (in the sense of a computer specification) by a linear differential equation and initial conditions. A large number of algorithms have been developed over the years based on this specification. We describe this area, with a specific focus to the applications to reliable numerical evaluation.