

Composing Nonlinear Solvers

Matthew Knepley, University of Chicago

We present, in analogy with the linear preconditioning operation, a framework for the composition of nonlinear solvers, which we call `\textit{nonlinear preconditioning}`, in order to accelerate convergence and improve solver performance. A unified software design is proposed, and illustrated with some examples of complex solver organization.